You are probably not on the antibiotic long enough. Have you had a culture and sensitivity of your urine done? I would find another doctor, preferably a urologist if the doc you have hasn't managed to figure it out in all this time. Is it cystitis? I often get that from intercourse, because the bladder can get bruised from being bashed around a bit. You can get sachets of Cystopurin from the pharmacist or even in some supermarkets, & mix one in a drink when you feel yourself starting to get a bout of cystitis. Urinary incontinence is an underdiagnosed and underreported problem that increases with age—affecting 50-84% of the elderly in long-term care facilities—and at any age is more than twice as common in females than in males. Urinary tract cytology is a common diagnostic test used in the initial work up of bladder cancer. Since its inception as an utilizable diagnostic technique by Dr. Papanicolaou in 1945, urinary cytology has proven to be a cheap, easily obtained, and accurate method in the detection of high-grade urothelial carcinoma., Urinary System Figure 15 3 Answers.
